

OER Barcamp organised with EPALE, Fürth Germany March, 04th-05th 2020

For two days, the Institute for Learning Innovation focused on Open Educational Resources (OER). On 4 and 5 March 2020, EPALE Germany together with the Institute for Learning Innovation – which was also the venue – organised an OER Barcamp. First of all, the first day included an introductory workshop on the documentation of Barcamp events. Before the participants then went to their pre-selected workshops, the general welcome by the representatives of EPALE and ILI took place. In the first workshop slot the participants could choose between several workshops, all of them on the topic of OER, be it to look at the topic legally, to find free material on the net or to create certain OER tools for the production of free and reusable materials.

In the afternoon, various sessions were scheduled. Sessions are a very typical characteristic of barcamps and run as follows: Everyone is a participant and can become a part of it to the same extent. If you want to say something about a certain topic, discuss a certain topic or are an expert in a certain field that might also interest other participants, you can offer it as a session topic. This will then be recorded on an overview board and distributed to the rooms. The second day had a similar course with further interesting topics and offers on the topic of OER.

OnTrain participated in this event at the project market, which took place for 2 hours starting in the afternoon. A poster presentation was used to draw attention to the OnTrain project. A lot of interesting conversations could be held and so the topic of Online training could be spread further. Many contacts could be made and many interested parties could be won for the further course of the project. The event was a complete success!
